Govindrao Wanjari College of Engineering and Technology, Nagpur,

INTRODUCTION :-

Industry Institute interaction can be defined as a systematic way to identify the common areas of interest of industries and institutes and work together for mutual benefit. To survive in the competitive market, production of quality product is very essential. Industries have accepted the fact but the technical institutes have not yet realized this.

For the technical institutes, the final product is engineers/technocrats either for employment or for self-employment, whose skills and attitudes meet international standard in relevant technologies established by the industry, which will contribute to the society actively. In a broad sense, industries are the main customers for their product. To survive in this competitive age, it is necessary for the technical institute to maintain quality of their product, by improving quality of education. At the same time industry is also facing major crisis.

Till around 1995, the industry was willing to spend time and money to train the fresh engineers to make them suitable for the job. However with changing economic policies, globalization and liberalization at world level, industries came under heavy pressure. Thus, now they have started putting pressure on the institutes to run job oriented, skills based, and competency based, and competency based programs. Thus the institutes should identify the industries (customers) needs. Incorporate the required changes in the curriculum and in the system and it should be continuous process, Industry institute interaction is a must.

DEPARTMENT OF GYMNASIUM

Role and Responsibilities

1. Get Healthy

The gym encourages you to do a balanced program that includes both aerobic and strength-training exercises. These promote heart health and weight loss, help prevent osteoporosis, improve muscle strength, balance and flexibility. If weight loss is a primary goal, consider the motto of a friend who tells me "nothing tastes as good as getting in shape feels."

2. Find Support and Motivation

Some people really enjoy exercise; for others, it's a chore. If you fall into that latter group, being surrounded by other people who are in the same boat can provide the incentive you need to make exercise part of your regular routine. Your initial intention might be to drag yourself to the gym twice a week, but once you find your rhythm, you may end up going on a more regular basis, which will help make your goals more attainable.

3. Get Stress Relief

According to the American Psychological Association, virtually any form of exercise can act as a stress reliever, whether you're a serious athlete or an out-of-shape wannabe. Physical activity boosts the brain's production of endorphins, which simply makes us feel better physically and have a brighter emotional outlook. Exercise reduces tensions in both the body and the mind, which can improve your mood and the quality of your sleep. For many people, the gym becomes a bit of sanctuary where you can turn off the phone and forget all of the troubles at work or in your personal life.

4. Learn From the Pros

Many gyms now have professional trainers on staff — often people with college degrees in sports science or other related fields, along with personal training certificates. They are trained to design exercise programs that fit your individual needs in a fun and safe way.

Knowing your proper exercise techniques so that you don't hurt yourself and that you get the most out of each exercise routine.

5. Sample the Varies

One of the big advantages a gym has over your guess, room/home gym is the wide array of weights, machines, exercise classes and other elements. This gives you the opportunity to try new exercise equipment and vary your routine. If you do the same workout day-in and day-out, your body builds a type of muscle memory and the gains you make are incrementally less. Fitness experts say that finding different ways to exercise the same muscles and muscle groups can improve the quality of your workout.

6. Learn From Each Other

Increasingly you'll see the people around you doing exercises that are new to you and may look sort of fun. You can certainly mirror and learn from others, but with this caveat: make sure you learn the proper technique so that you don't injure yourself. Just because someone else is doing something that looks interesting, doesn't mean that they know what they're doing. On the other hand, most people are happy to share the knowledge they've acquired. Ask them what that exercise is meant to accomplish and about the proper form to do it right.

7. Try a week

Many people find exercise classes to be the most efficient and fun way to get a full body workout. You can do everything from Aqua Aerobics (where there's a pool) to Zumba, and from kickboxing to yoga. There's usually a very energetic leader to help provide you with some extra energy and motivation. Many people do have to get over the hump initially of being the class newbie, where it seems like you're the only one who doesn't know the right steps or positions, or the only man in a class of a dozen women (Granted, that's not necessarily a p roblem for all men) Don't worry though. They are concentrating on their own form and are watching yours.
